For Mano Mahadeva, cooking is the thing that calms him after a day at the office. Five to six nights a week, Mahadeva makes his way home from Solis Mammography around 7 PM and embarks on putting something together for dinner, like his signature lamb curry.

It's no wonder that Mahadeva looks at the team at Solis Mammography like he does a recipe, with all of the components working together to create something "fabulous."

"It's all about peace of mind. It's all about compliance. It's all about wellness," he explained.

"It takes exceptional people to pull this off. Part of our culture is to continue to improve service, which is very important because that's what differentiates us from our competition."

The CFO, who hails from Sri Lanka originally, abides by the mantra of "tone at the top" to keep his well-balanced team cohesive and compliant.

"The leaders at the organization need to make sure that employees are doing the right thing," said Mahadeva.

"The regulatory environment works around patient privacy and patient safety. It talks about critical care, and it talks about allocation of resources."
